RACING SLOOP ACUSHLA SOLD TO HAMERSLEY

Jennings's Pauline Prize Winner in Championship Series Among 'Forties'

By CAPTAIN JAMES C. SUMMERS One of the tangible evidences of the increasing interest in yacht racing as a live sport is the frequent change in ownership in yachts of the onedesign and other classes. This occurs for various reasons not always because a boat is out of date. Often the owner of a racing yacht which has not been winning in her class as often as he thinks she should sells her at a sacrifice to a man who, by some judicious alteration in rig or sail plan, develops the latent speed in the yacht and makes a prize winner out of her out of her Sometimes an ewner, like Cornelius Vanderbilt, who has taken an active interest in the sport since he was a bey, and who delights in racing his own yacht, finds that pressure of busi-own yacht, finds that pressure of business, and in his case military duties, prevents indulgence in his favorite pastime. At the helm of his 65-foot sloop Aurora he has won many races in competition with the other one-design sloops of that class, the Istalena and Winsome.

design sloops of that class, the istalens and Winsome.

Both of these have changed hands,
but Commodore Vanderbilt, being attached to his boat, refused many offers for the Aurora. She was out of commission for several years, but last summer she was at the starting line in the squadron runs of the New York Yacht Club, and she showed her old-time speed by winning one of the most coveted prizes—the Astor cup for sloops as well as the cups offered by the commodore and vice-commodore.

Out of Commission

A recent important transfer was the sale, by Herman Steinbrugge, of the Larchmont and other yacht clube, of his sloop Acushla—one of the "lifties"—to Louis Gordon Hamersley, of the New York Yacht Club, whose "thirty," the Okee, was so successful last summer as a prize winner in the Long Island Sound and other races. The Acushla was not in commission last summer, but her late owner gave her a new set of spars just before he sold her. It goes without saying that the yacht will be at the starting line next season in the races of that popular class.

Announcement was made last week that the winner of the championship series prize among the "forties" was the Pauline, owned by Oliver G. Jennings, and handled in most of her races by Charles L. Perrin, of the Larchmont Yacht Club—and not Wilson Marshall's Jessica, as stated in last Monday's Tribane.

Marshall's Jessica, as stated in last Monday's Tribune.

It is understood that the class committee—Wilson Marshall, George M. Pynchon and H. S. Duell, owners, respectively, of the Jessica, the Mistral and the Rowdy—which is elected by the owners of all the yachts of that class, made an error in allotting the percentage, which is the basis of the computation to determine the winner of the series.

A loud squawk has gone up that the fighters are killing the boxing game. This is true, but in no ways new. Just when did a fighter ever give a rap about his game save for the kale he could collect? Yet the situation is to be easily handled. Cut their present pay a trifle more than half in two, and withhold this part of it until they have made good. If they have no desire to fight under these conditions, the community at large will be able to stand the calamity and the Truck Drivers' Union may be able to find openings for the raw material turned back on society. To leave the fighting game in charge of the fighters is as ase and sane a proposition as it would be for England to invite the Germas army to spend a week in London. D. linvite the German army to spend a week in London.

"When is the temperature too cold for golf?" asks a reader. When you hit a fine mashie shot close to the pin and your hands hurt so you are sorry you took turf, it is about time to quit.

Another sign is when you find yourself, here and there, missing 15 and 18 foot putts through lack of control of frozen wrists.
